

ONENESS

Buddhist Church of Florin

June 2022

Volume 6

June is National Ocean Month. The purpose of having a month dedicated to our oceans is not simply to recognize their beauty, but also to raise awareness to our connection to them and bring attention to how they are ailing from human indifference. There are millions of tons of plastic thrown into the oceans every year and currently billions of plastic microfibers in the deep sea. On top of this, the temperature of the ocean is rising without any sign of slowing, let alone stopping. All of these things are a result of human interaction, and, in turn, this affects not only humans, but also marine life as well.

Perhaps it's just me, but it seems like every year is the hottest year ever, year after year. And although it may be very intuitive to follow that if it's hotter on land that it must be hotter in the ocean, I hadn't thought about that also being affected by climate change. In fact, the ocean absorbs most of the excess heat from greenhouse gas emissions. This affects marine ecosystems which destroys breeding grounds for marine life and thus, less fish and mammals. As food for human consumption, it threatens the food security of those depending on those fish to survive. On top of this, the rising temperatures also affects the weather systems. As the ocean interacts with the atmosphere to create winds, storms, and hurricanes, the warming ocean means, among other things, increasing severity of tropical storms which causes damage to human structures as well as the make up of the land they cross.

What does this information mean to us? As Buddhists, it is important for us to develop compassion for other beings. An example of this can be found in the Karaniya Metta Sutta which has the meditation saying, "May all beings be well and safe, may they be at ease. Whatever living beings there may be, whether moving or standing still, without exception, whether large, great, middling, or small, whether tiny or substantial, whether seen or unseen, whether living near or far, Born, or unborn; may all beings be happy. Let none deceive or despise another anywhere. Let none wish harm to another, in anger or in hate." As we go about developing this compassion, we begin to see how our actions impact other beings: other humans, marine animals, and even the plant life like coral and kelp. If we truly wish to realize the wish within the Metta Sutta, we must take responsibility for how we may be preventing the wellbeing and safety of others. This is not to say that we must forsake all of our modern comforts to live solely off the land (although if that suits you, please go ahead) but that such a large problem means that all of us must contribute in some way to the solution. For the month of June (and hopefully beyond) let us contemplate the consequences of our choices and the impact it may have on the connections we have with our ocean family.

Gassho,
Rev. Matthew Hamasaki
